The First World War

The Caribbean people's involvement in the First World War began in 1914, when the British Empire declared war on Germany. The Caribbean colonies were quick to offer their support, and within a matter of months, thousands of Caribbean men had volunteered to fight in the war.

The Caribbean soldiers fought in many of the major battles of the war, including the Battle of the Somme and the Battle of Passchendaele. They also served in non-combat roles, such as in the medical corps and the supply chain.

The Caribbean people's contribution to the war effort was significant. They fought bravely and with distinction, and their sacrifice helped to secure victory for the Allies.

The Second World War

The Caribbean people's involvement in the Second World War began in 1939, when the British Empire declared war on Germany once again. The Caribbean colonies were quick to offer their support, and within a matter of months, thousands of Caribbean men and women had volunteered to fight in the war.

The Caribbean soldiers and women fought in many of the major battles of the war, including the Battle of Britain, the Battle of El Alamein, and the D-Day landings. They also served in non-combat roles, such as in the medical corps and the supply chain.
